The Selma Irrigator is authority for the statement that Louis James did not play the part of Falstoff here last Monplay the part of Falstaff hero last Mon-day night, but sat in the audience while Warde show took the part of Falstaff and Warde show took the part his father was billed for. The interceting part of this story is destroyed by the fact that it is all wrong. James played his own part, the elder Warde played his, and true younger Warde played his. It would be of intercet to know who played the part of the practical joker on the Schun ed-itor.

Or is our spirit so broken that we will no longer even lift up the voice against oppression, but surrender ourselves to the despoiler? Shall we tamely subvertient and say to the commission packers, "Take it all this year, take it all, only promise not to bring us in debt and that we may have our sweat boxes back."

The orange growers of Southern California and the grune growers of the Santa Clara valley have greatly benefited themselves by co-operation, and now let every grower who can attend the meeting on Saturday and see if we cannot inaugurate a like movement, which shall eventually take in every raisin grower and lift the industry from more shine upon it, and we again stand as freemen, untettered by the shackles of the commission system.

Children nover tire of ring games.
They like the simple ones best—these that do not tax the memory to any great extent-writes Mrs. A. G. Lewis in Ladies' Home Journal. They prefer comething with a catching swing in the thythm, carrying the same words through many verses, with just enough verbal change to Indicate the progress The came of flowers is simple and of having men who possess the confidence of the growers at the head of any morement for the redemption of the raisin inclustry. While this is true, "Vineyarist." and others seem to hold the mistaken iden that the movement move on foor in the nature of an organization which certain men are trying offered for the purpose of themselves managing the sale of our raisins. I was present at the meeting held at the Hughes hotel, and though I cannot say what ambitions certain men may have with regard to the movement, so far as I was able to learn, it is an honest, spentaneous movement, growing out of informal meetings of a moniter of raisin growers, who, having decided that cooperation is the only indee of the raisin industry, now issue a lall for a general meeting to a rouse the growers to the importance of such actions a their part. Some one has to propose a plan of section, and I requestly ubusit that if "Vineyardist" and others approve the plan (as he admits) it would show more side and criticies ones one who has made himself prominent in the preliminary discussions. It wouldn't be the part of wise in the plan is not asked to "entrust his raising" to these mon—this not a proposed a men plan to ecoperate in handling our mariasit." It is played similar to "London Bridge." Two children stand opposite to each other and raise their joined hands. The leader may hold a bonnet and give to each child the flewer chasen.

The next child, "Butterene," being fully "found," takes the place of "Daffodit," and the child who has held that place goes into the ring. The newcomer calls out the name of some flower, like bright blueboll, daisy flower or mignonte and substituting that word they bine to got some one clee to do what we must do for ourselves, and experience has taught us all that a combine cannot be made that will hold either the grower or the packers, and the packers have demonstrated the impossibility of obtaining living prices by the commission plan of handling our raisins. In this I make no charge against the personal interrity of the packers; there are doubtless housest as well as dishousest packers; and I am plaused to say that to my dealings with some of them I have found them fair and honorable.

But this is not a question of honest or dishonest men; rather of a system of doing business which has been tried and proven to be mercileasly unjust to the grower, and it is in delense of our bomes that we say that we cannot any longer stand it. It is co-operate or go out of bright blueball, daisy flower or mignonette, and substituting that word they sing as before. Each ohild tries to be ready with the hame of some favorite flower, and the game may close when each child flower has been "found."

A game in which the children can run is always a favorite. "Fox" is another ring play, so easy that the smallest children can play it without help.
One of the children "fox" stays outside the ring and slyly slags the shoulder of one of the children. "Fox" runs to the loft, the child to the right. They need, to the "doe" (the place in the Ing where the child was standing) may hold that place, and the other must be the for and try a rece with some other child.

The magic bridge is another popular gme. The oblidtent pion hands and form a ring. If the number is large, there should be four "bridges" at the quarter points of the ring, these being numbered 1, 3, 8 and 4—one opposite 3 and two opposite 4. The bridges are formed by two children, who raise their joined hands for the others to pass under. The planist leads with a bright, familiar air, and the children all follow the tune, singing "Tra-la-la, tra-la-la" as they dance and skip along, keeping step to the music. They go one or more times around in a cicelo, then the leader indicates where a "bridge" is to be much. Two children steading opposite in the ring cross the conter of the circle. All the athurs fallow of the hands, and the two children standing opposite in the ring cross the center of the circle. All the others follow after, pass under the "bridge." Then, turning to the right and left respectively, the two lines follow the path of the circles formed first, meet, join lineds again, and a new circle is formed. Another "bridge" appears as if by mapic, and the children opposite it lead again through it, the while keeping the merry measure with song and dance. This one is of the prettiest of dancing games, which is not mercsary to "know how"

It acts in two ways-as a medicine destroying the germs which cause the disease, and as a food stopping the wasting (the consuning), and replacing the lost flesh and tissue.
